Stripped of profits

SPRINGER 100, 000 PERMANENT PUBLISHED

SWISS POLICE continued to put pressure on offenders by stripping them of their criminal profits to the tune of over £2.4 million in the past year (news 4).

The news comes as the horse has also this month (July 2004) achieved its best ever result in terms of confiscation orders issued under the Proceeds of Crime Act (POCA). Five matched defendants in a major national horse-race betting fraud have been served with confiscation orders for a total of £14 million.

Using powers under PCCA, the force had successfully applied to courts during the financial year 2003/04 for six confiscation orders following criminal convictions, valued at £1,490,000. The force also obtained six forfeiture orders valued at £153,470, following convictions from suspected offenders and a further £13,077 in other forfeitures.

Detective Inspector Mick Richards of the Drugs Economic Crime Unit, said: "These are just the latest results of continuing hard work by our officers, and in particular our expert financial tracing team."

New films unearth Chichester's ancient artefacts

Roman ad lamp

ADCEST artefacts unearthed in Chichester have been brought back to life in a series of new videos created by a history student.

Undergraduate Emily Hunt, from the University of Chichester, filmed the shorts while on work experience at the Museum of the City.

The videos, which have been published on YouTube, feature a 2,000-year-old Roman oil lamp found in the city centre, dating from the Roman period, as well as a Roman gold coin found during the excavation.

Emily said: "The museum asked me to research some of their old oil lamps and coins, mostly those that are not currently on display, and create a few video clips about them."

"Through visiting the Museum I have been shown a lot of other possibilities when history isn't just about the past, and what I would like to pursue further."

The second year student created the videos as her final year assignment for the range of roles from Chichester's past during a six-month placement at the museum.

She added: "The work requires research in great for students who have what some might think is a bit of a hobby, but also for people who want to, and before I had no idea what I wanted to do after graduation."

"I'm thoroughly enjoyed my time at the Museum that I have continued as a volunteer since the placement ended."

Scheme is helping people to get back into work

AN INNOVATIVE SCHEME that is helping people to get back into work is helping to expand its work, following support from councillors at Chichester District Council.

The 'Choose Work' scheme has already assisted over 100 people and provided over 600 hours of available work experience. It's entered the scheme has already won the public purse £20,000 a year – two times the original investment – with 4% of those taking part continuing to find work.

The scheme, which has been running since January 2013, is now looking to be led for approximately 10 years from the Department for Work and Pensions, after Chichester District Council agreed to reduce £50,000 from the New Housing Scheme funding of the application is successful.

The money will enable the project to employ two part-time coordinators over three years. One coordinator will focus on the rural areas of the district, while the other coordinator will continue working in Chichester and the 'Think Family' neighbourhood areas. There is also an additional coordinator based at Boleyn Girls School in Boleyn Hill Street.

'Choose Work' offers job awards of any age. Candidates to secure a two to six week voluntary placement.

The placement provides them with vital skills and helps them to gain the experience needed to get ahead in the job market. The scheme also provides mentoring, life coaching and career advice to all of those who take part. Thirty recipients, including Chichester District Council, have offered work placements. The scheme led to a permanent job for Kirby Marshall, who was one of the first people to benefit from the scheme.

"I have always wanted to work in customer service. The Choose Work Scheme provided me with a placement on the reception at Marygate Leisure Chichester. This not only gave me the vital experience I needed, but it also led to a permanent job as a Customer Services Assistant at the centre," says Kirby.

"It's a really nice environment to work in and I love helping the customers."

Aime McNeill also found that her work placement as a Customer Services Assistant at Chichester District Council provided her with the skills and confidence she needed to find a job. She now works as a Library Assistant at Boleyn Girls School in Chichester.

"The scheme has given me the knowledge of how to present myself and build good relationships within the workplace. It has also helped me to discover that helping people is actually something I am very passionate about and I believe that shows through in my current work."

Sarahella Wells, who now works as an Administrative Assistant at Chichester District Council, also shares that the scheme gave her the boost she needed.

"Choose Work was a very individual journey for me, allowing me to experience different aspects of the office environment and allow me to regain a little bit of confidence."

Job seekers can continue to receive job seekers allowance while taking part in the scheme. The Choose Work Coordinator recommends getting job seekers based on the idea that they are interested in. This means that the placements are always relevant to the person. They are also given a mini interview and a reference as part of the placement to prepare them for the workplace.

The scheme, set up by Chichester in Partnership as part of its 'Get People into Work' Strategy, was originally funded following a successful bid for money from the Department for Work and Pensions. Councillor Myles Collins, Chichester Member for Commercial Services at Chichester District Council, says: "We are determined to do everything we can to help improve job opportunities for our residents. The project has already been extremely successful and we are very keen to build on this. The next step is to bid for money from the Department for Work and Pensions. We also want to encourage even more businesses across the district to get involved and provide even more placements."

Anyone interested in offering work experience placements can contact Steve Hill, Work Experience Coordinator at Chichester District Council, by email at shill@chichester.gov.uk or call 01243 359100 or 01243 359101.

Logging your goods

RESIDENTS are being urged to join the battle against burglary by logging their valuables on a national website.

Immobilise is the world's largest property register and allows police and the public to work together to make stolen items less hot to handle.

Residents can enter the details of their possessions on the free website and report when they have been stolen.

Police officers not just in Sussex but across the UK can then check the details of items that they find or seize against the database.

By confirming that the seized item had been stolen, officers can then look to prosecute whoever they were stolen from for burglary or handling stolen goods – and can return the valuable to their rightful owner.

Sussex Police is encouraging residents to use Immobilise as part of Operation Muggo, the force's crackdown on burglary across the county.

Detective Chief Inspector Paul Ikin said: "When our officers respond to reports of burglary, they often cannot get enough detailed information about the items which have been stolen without old loans for electronic items or photographs of jewellery for example it can be very difficult to accurately identify what has been stolen."

Police authorities greatly increase the chance of us being able to return stolen property to its rightful owner, help us to get a better picture of which burglaries could be linked and give us the evidence we need to prove that property is stolen.

This helps us to link items to burglaries and those taking on stolen goods and means we can get officers off the streets and into the courts."

Katy Soane, Sussex Police's Crime Commissioner, is backing

the campaign urging residents to register their property like this: "It'd be nice to see as many residents as possible playing their part in helping to beat burglary in Sussex."

"It's simple and it's free to register your personal items on the website and I hope people will do so. As well as making it easier for the police to track down registered owners, it can also act as a deterrent as it makes it harder for thieves to steal items as because they can be identified."

By million people use Immobilise and every week thousands of people are contacted with their lost or stolen property because of the web.

As well as registering mobile phones and electronic items with serial numbers, residents can also register other items by uploading photographs and giving a description.

They can also use the website to instantly receive a list of all their property and request all certificates of ownership if they need to make a claim to their insurance company.

You can register your property for a few minutes by visiting www.immobilise.com.

The man in the orange boiler suit must be a mirage

We've had a lot of new street lamps go up in Charleston. You can spot where they're going before they appear, with a white chalk outline on the pavement, a cross between a Raymond Chandler cross and a Jon Swann secret barometer.

Their whole LED bulbs give warm illumination but, nonetheless, don't you find, that the same, inner glow of the old ones? I got it and through the door asking me to take part in a survey about them. I wish I had a reason for every survey I've been asked to take part in recently. I heard on the street yesterday that because more have found the new lamps too piercing, the electricity company has put groups over them to dim the glare. So if you or I see a lamp post with a net over the top of it, it's like the one that our man is taking the brand of LED's has to meet, that is below.

You've heard of trout assemblages

I've been counting the new lamp posts going up. No, not really, but

"Cinema works on two already on an epic scale," he bellowed. "My cinema had a programme of installing lamps on roads that had been used for decades to improve safety than they're having the lamps off at night to save money!" But when you drive past the Grand Cinema late at night, all the lights are still on. It's dimmed up with "Don't get me started about workers sitting in snow working the Sun" alluding perhaps to affixing signs and glowing dashboard lights.

When good old Willie saw his men in a way to access emergency power on the station, I did a head of town and Jerry double time to the area I encountered. I rubbed my eyes, was I really seeing what I was seeing? I contacted the emergency. Yes, outside the station, there was a van, with its engine running, providing emergency power and right by it, keeping a close eye on the technician was a big operator in overalls, working on hard for his show that he needed a nap, right there in the street. This behavior individual was laughing in an expressive manner that he'd not been two, three. He was on the phone, taking a good fifteen min., and he had a copy of the Sun. Tell you what, though, he snapped to when I cautiously entered what he was doing.

But on that occasion, we tramped across some fields in Slindon on a gorgeous late summer afternoon, Dr. Miesau talking me about why we need "dark sky ports." There's so much light pollution leaking up into the night sky now that it's almost impossible to see the stars unless you're right on the middle of nowhere. Dark sky ports would be places that would be kept dark, so we'd look up at the heavens and see them like the constellations.

There again, we need our street lights.

Walking or cycling away from Clonchester railway station after the last train back from London is fine in the summer. But when we go back to winter time, the street lamps on some side streets go dark an hour earlier – before you can get home if you're coming back from work or on a evening out on the last train. As long as we're

I missed the chance if they could leave a lamp on to light a solitary campesino's journey home off that last town — without success. Apparently, it wasn't possible to programme one to stay on longer, though I'm sure some of them do.

Official opening of St Wilfrid's Hospice Terminus Road outlet

ALSOUGH it started trading on 7 July, the Terminus Road outlet held its official opening party on Friday 25 July from 4pm and 8pm. The event was attended by staff, trustees and customers as well as representatives from the newspaper and businesses which helped with the project right from the beginning. Drinks and canapés were served in the fabulous conservatory.

Trishie Amanda Sharp cut the ribbon and said: "The showroom looks wonderful. Total customers a significant amount of funding for the Hospice and I'm sure that new section will be successful."

As well as a furniture outlet the site will also be a second Chichester Centre, and the Hospice's on-line trading department will also have been in the rooms.

Manager Zara Richards said: "We've been really busy since we opened and have had a very positive response from customers."

Chief Executive Alison Moxley was among the guests and thanked the staff who had worked hard to get the site up and running. She said: "The Hospice only receives soft funding from the NHS, the rest has to be raised and the retail operation is one of the largest contributors. 74 like to walk into and hear from every customer."

Terminus Road is the largest of the Hospice's retail sites, and donations are always welcome. You can call on 01243 536661 and arrange for furniture donations to be collected, or drop smaller items off at the rear of the building. There is easy access and ample parking.

Green-fingered residents of a West Sussex town raise thousands

WITH SIX MONTHS of hard graft, green-fingered people from Chichester opened their gardens to the public to raise money for two local charities: Alzheimer's Society and St Wilfrid's Hospice in Chichester.

On Sunday 22 June, city residents enjoyed the sights of St John's Open Gardens and followed the trail around the Sussex town and down to the coast.

There were 35 gardens and two allotments to visit around, and visitors gave a donation to the two charities.

Dispersed by Margaret and Gerry Davidson, the day took a total of 40,000, which will be split between the two charities – each receiving 20,000.

Hannah Miller, Alzheimer's Society Community Facilitator for West Sussex, said: "It was a wonderful day and very well attended. It's fantastic that fundraising volunteers Margaret and Gerry supported us with such a brilliant event. We would like to thank you to them and all the owners of the gardens and allotments for opening them up to the public."

John Longman, St Wilfrid's Hospice Events and Community Manager in Chichester: "The St John's Open Gardens event has been running for a number of years now, and I'd like to thank all the gardeners for their hard work. Huge thanks go to Margaret and Gerry, and everyone who went along to see the gardens, their support is very much appreciated. The money raised will help us to continue providing our specialist care to people across the community."

News in Brief

A former politician is to be charged with murdering a man who was shot dead after a car was stopped by police in north London nine years ago. Anish Roshni, 39, was travelling in a car that was stopped by police, who were looking for a suspect they believed was on his way to an armed robbery. An inquiry last year chaired by Sir Christopher Hood said there was "no level justification" for the shooting.

Former Manchester United manager David Moyes is being investigated over an alleged affair with a bar in Levenshaye, police have said. Moyes was spoken to by police after builder Josh Chelmsley, 39, claimed he was attacked at the pub when Moyes was bar in Chichester in May. Moyes reported Moyes was abused by a group of young men shortly before he entered the bar.

Eastbourne Pier ruined by fire

A FIRE on the pier has taken hold of Eastbourne Pier, with fire crews desperately battling to save what is left of the historic seaside landmark.

East Sussex Fire and Rescue Service crews battled at the scene which has been captured in dramatic photographs by those on the beach.

Eastbourne Borough Council described the blaze at the "much loved landmark" as "major".

Police from earlier on Wednesday showed volunteers watching thick black smoke pouring upwards from the pier and its building, with flames visible above the roof.

The fire was seen just an hour and a half after the fire crews were called. The rest of the pier building appeared to have been almost completely destroyed.

The fire was the first to be seen in the history of the pier.

There have been no reports of injuries.

Sybilene Alister Miller said: "My view is right at the front of the pier."

"At first there was smoke coming out of the top of it. The fire alarm had gone off and they were evacuating people."

"Then I got here there were lots of fire engines and lots of police."

"The fire was in the main building at the moment."

The fire service says around 10 firefighters tackled the blaze at the two-storey building, which is used as a cinema from the pierhead.

East Sussex Police said they had officers at the scene to help with local road closures and to prevent the public getting too close to the fire, adding the Coastguard dispatched with the fire to contain the blaze.

The fire service added: "We were alerted at 11.45pm on 30 July and a report of a small fire believed to be a wall painting - as part of the pier having events planned."

British Airways to be sued over pilot abuse claims

NINETEEN AIRWAYS is to be sued for damages over claims one of its pilots sexually abused children at African schools and clinics.

Lawsuits claim the airline knew accordingly because the alleged victim was searched by Fleet Officer Simon Wood while on assignment.

Mr Wood, 54, from Putney in London, died when he was hit by a train on 20 August last year.

It is said of was "abused and harassed" by the allegations.

An report is due to be held into the death of Mr Wood, which has been charged with one count of indecent assault of a girl under 16, two counts of indecent exposure photographs of a child and one count of possessing indecent material of a child.

Last time Hugh Dry and Mr Wood allegedly visited youngsters during stopovers at Kenya, Uganda and Tanzania while they were in Africa. Some of their lives are on the night.

Lawyer Nicholas Marshall said: "We allege that Wood was able to abuse the victim, by reason of his employment with the airline, in particular through his involvement with the airline's community relations work."

The claims and allegations that one claimant was all in receipt of charitable donations from the airline, and Mr Wood played a key role in administering those donations, on behalf of British Airways.

The Crown Prosecution Service said Mr Wood was first arrested over an indecent assault allegation in November 2009 but prosecutors ruled there was insufficient evidence to charge him.

It recommended the case after receiving new details of similar alleged offences committed overseas and against evidence of indecent images.

A British Airways spokesman said: "We were shocked and horrified to hear the allegations against Simon Wood."

One spokesman said with the victim and it is disappointing that the conduct of one person has caused so much distress to the many thousands of decent people who engage in charitable work on a regular basis.

The lawsuit against Wood is due to be held at Northampton County Court.

No appeal over Rolf Harris sex offences sentence

Copyright was helped following Rolf Harris' conviction earlier this month.

ROLF HARRIS' sex offences sentence will not be referred to the Court of Appeal, despite 100 complaints over his "innocent" offences personally often his said.

The 70-year-old was jailed for five years and nine months for 12 indecent assaults on four girls.

Complaints were lodged following his conviction earlier this month.

In a statement, the office and the attorney general underlined the decision would cause disappointment.

It said Attorney General Jeremy Wright would not refer the sentence.

to the Court of Appeal as "he did not think they would find it to be unduly lenient and excessive".

The office said the judge had been required to take Harris' age into account.

"The sentencing judge was bound by the maximum sentence as force in the case of the offending," it added.

"The judge made some of the maximum sentence to reach the total sentence, but he could not simply add up sentences on individual counts, the overall sentence had to be just and proportionate to the overall offending."

Owner of 18 Goodwood Village Pubs

It was bright and sunny that Wednesday morning, with the sun shining down on the new boot camp, as Wesley Clarke, owner of 18 Goodwood Village Pubs, stood in front of the new boot camp, wearing a bright yellow t-shirt and a black cap, with the words 'mindseye' on it.

Following the graduation of a trainer as you are encouraged to work hard. Having lived Boot Camp before, I was keen to attend this new group that everyone's talking about to see what all the fuss was about.

I arrived at Oaklands and met up with the group, who were attached to the first and second sides of the field. The group consisted of a good selection of people, with varying levels of fitness but all with genuine, welcoming and warm attitude.

After warming up, we began to use the beautiful and natural surroundings of the park to exercise. This involved strength work (using kettle bells and other weight), cardiovascular exercise (running, interval training and obstacle course challenges) followed by muscle conditioning, core work (using ropes, bands and other body equipment) which is essential for keeping your heart working and fat burning once the session has ended.

I felt like my mind as well as my body had got a really good workout. I was sweating, breathing hard, surrounded by green grass and trees and I was being motivated by the trainers to do that extra step to challenge me. It was great. And what's even better, I lost track of time. I know we are recommended to take at least 70 minutes of fresh air exercise three times a week, but for me 45 minutes of outdoor exercise like this is a much better way to exercise.

I asked Gilly why he felt it was important to offer Chichester these outdoor boot camp sessions and this is what he told me. "I wanted only one at my centre, that being, control of your health and fitness can change your life in all ways and my mission is to show that with other people. I am being outdoors and I love to move. I feel very confident when I train as a gym, with artificial lighting, music and loud people going through the same, make-or-buy routines, with other people, without any making any real progress. Just going through the motions. At the Chichester Boot Camp sessions we can offer people the solution they need with our full-body, fat burning workouts and we can guarantee results. We also advise our group members about nutrition and other techniques to their lives which can really help them to make the change they have always wanted."

The experience I had with the Chichester Boot Camp was great and it gave me so much more than I had thought it would. The sessions take place morning, mid-morning and evening throughout the week and weekend and right now anyone interested in trying it out can do so at £10.00.

Following a highly successful

The eight-mile run, which takes in the three peaks of the Lymington Valley near Chichester, uses the tracks and trails of the glorious Goodwood Estate and covers some of the most stunning countryside in the South.

Diverse National Park Spectators can watch from the comfort of the three valley pits, The Fox Goes Free in Chertow, The Partridge in Sengle and The Blue and Carter in East Dens, which will all provide water stations for runners during the race and refueling stations afterwards.

The May Challenge is organized by local fitness company and hosts of the now popular Valley East Camp, Wilkes-Barre Fitness, to raise funds for England's Mopedfest. Last year's event raised nearly 200 meters and raised an incredible £1000 for the local children, thanks to sponsorship from local energy company E.ON and Mote of East Devon. The local fitness company, who came from all over the south of England, was overwhelmingly positive. There was even a surprise celebrity race at Hugh Downs, star of Weekend Update and Let's Eat the Rich, turned out to run the day.

This year's race, which is sponsored by Citrus and Kiss, takes place on Saturday 20 September, starting at 10am at East Down Village Hall. The village hall serves as Race HQ and offers homemade cakes and other refreshments, registration, bag-drop and a change station. All

Students will receive a beautifully handcrafted and unique wooden model from Whims of West Penn and a bag of goodies to say thank you. The race is a challenge but suitable for runners of all abilities and is sponsored. Excellent mix of textures, super tough hole reinforced with lining open structure. Superb organization. Very friendly! Matt Cook

A great run, probably the best I've run all year. Excellent organization with tea and cake at the end to wind off a great morning's exercise. A part in the pub after also helped to dull the cold and pains of the latter! Dave Hume.

Thank you for today's work. What a lovely team you had, with everything so well organized! The physics, the 'goodie bag', the pizza (which we shall wait in the near future), the very special medals – and don't let me forget the final, lemon posset and coffee. A very special day!" Mike Donovan.

Brits stuck in food rut - eating seven 'safe meals'

FOLLOW US ON TWITTER
@chichesterhd

BRITS DREAM of broadening their culinary horizons – but regularly fall back on the same seven 'safe meals', it emerged this week.

Researchers found a lack of time and confidence plays havoc with the typical Brit's meal plans and despite good intentions to give up old favourites the seven-day week often wins.

In fact, a quarter of adults made the same meals on the SAME days every week and have a strict rotation plan.

Of these, the typical adult has the same meal schedule in place for nearly four years, but a third is a not 10 per cent have when the same thing on the same days of the week for 12 years or more.

Typically, UK families will be eating spaghetti on a Monday, chicken on a Tuesday and pork chops on Wednesday. Thursday's language and chicken is the last of the day on a Friday.

But one in four said if they knew it planned something to advance they tried to fall back on a frozen pizza, egg and chips or a take-away.

A spokesman for the Old Demons Catering which runs one of the research to launch its 'Upgrade Your Taste buds' campaign said:

"This research shows we are really lacking imagination when it comes to experimenting with food. "Getting the same meals week after week for years and years is not very appealing, although it's easy to see how we become stuck in a rut. "Busy lives, long commutes and domestic chores all take their toll and that research shows many adults are falling back on a handful of safe meals and drinks rather than experimenting with new flavours and recipes. "Following the phages and trading new flavours and finding what goes with what does take confidence but it's worth it to broaden your culinary horizons."

The study found that one in two resort to buying their colleagues for most vegetables and quite often every day about what they are having to eat that evening.

A more conventional 50 per cent want to prepare for dinner and one in ten ask their dinner about what to prepare.

It's no wonder we lack imagination – 40 per cent of adults find that they have low levels of confidence.

And more than half (50 per cent) said they don't consider themselves to have an exotic palate. Despite that, 60 per cent admitted that they don't like to eat food that is not from their home country.

And 20 per cent said they often struggle to cook a new recipe when they are having to cook for a family and drinks.

But surprisingly then, more than half said for some people are 'foodie' sometimes.

And one in seven said they are completely overwhelmed by their lack of knowledge when it comes to their lack of imagination.

Fashion & Lifestyle

Prince George inspires rise in mini fashion

THE MAJORITY of UK parents believe their children are more fashion conscious than ever before, according to new research.

But is it the kids that are alone to believe, or their ultra-fashionable parents?

A survey by the fashion and lifestyle brand, Paul Frost, found that 84 per cent of parents think children today are more fashion conscious than in previous years, with 46 per cent saying kids get their fashion sense from friends as opposed to just a few mums who believe they got it from their parents.

But a study by Cotton USA found that nearly half of UK parents (49 per cent) admitted valuing culture and social values over the likes of the Queen and Harper Beckham influenced how they dressed their children, prompting the trend to be known as the 'Harper Beckham effect'.

But Marylene Price, head of brand at the online children's fashion site Mini & Me, says: "Childlike children are definitely pulling interest in children's fashion, although I don't think any child designer would say we are looking at the celebrity children, it's their parents who look at them and want to dress their kids the same."

While Alex and Aislin catered for children up to the age of 10, the kids of their business as in the two to four-year-old age group and there was a large celebrity influence on demand for clothes for children of this age, says Marylene.

And it's not just little girls that are being dressed like celebrity children.

"There's a misconception that the other Prince George has had - but some high profile outfits that Harper Beckham, she says: "When he was dressed, for example, we saw as much more interest in the clothing items."

"There's a fascination with him and also with going back to more traditional, quality children's fashion."

Indeed, when the little Prince was seen in a grey smock and striped socks with a red bow tie, the Mail called it a 'mini Prince' look, as the Telegraph said in April, the name could be another trend.

Marylene points out that sports events, such as the World Cup and Wimbledon, can spark children's fashion ideas, and a recent designer for London-based Stella McCartney looking to produce a clothing line for the Disney film Madagascar is also a strong combination for kids and their parents.

Inspired by the characters and world from the imaginary tale, the Madagascar by Stella McCartney kids capsule collection includes night play clothes for boys and girls aged five to 12.

The range includes contrasting pieces, because princess-like dresses and sweaters or shirts and edgy T-shirts and trousers.

The clothes are available at Stella McCartney stores, select Debenhams and online.

"Stella like Stella McCartney style are expensive, but not out of your price, and they're still accessible," Marylene says.

"So when Harper Beckham is photographed wearing a Stella McCartney dress, there's huge interest and lots of traffic on our website looking for the dress."

Marylene thinks children are aware of celebrities and the way they dress them, at least the age of five, and research by Mini & Me clothing and home has George has found that, from birth to the age of six, it's extremely parents who choose how to dress their children.

But from three to five years of age to be girls, with parents choosing character bags - a key driver for children's clothes.

After the age of 11, parents have the most influence, followed by friends, fashion and brother-sister clothes.

But Frances Lushington, vice-president of George, says: "I think children are influenced by other child clothes. I think some parents are 'I like and boys are wearing more of my fashion trends'."

For girls, she says the current fashion or the playmate and corporate, tribal prints and some casual with blushed denim.

In the autumn and winter, there are a woodland influence will be all the rage, she predicts.

Boys are currently wearing slouchy jeans, band T-shirts and rolled sleeve shirts.

The Paul Frost research found that 52 per cent of parents think children are more body-conscious than in previous years but in the past, as fashion became more affordable.

But kids choosing their own clothes seems to have become a far more common, as 49 per cent of children are able to get dressed faster when they pick their own outfit.

"With paper out of our kids' range under 15, we are hard 15 items and forecasts that when being the biggest paper money spend," says Price.

And many of these items, Kelly, editor of parenting website ParentingAdvice, points out: "I have a new T-shirt on me and a couple of pounds of pocket money, it's no surprise kids' wardrobe is so full."

Cherry Juice could be the answer to perfect sleep

The days are hot...and I am NOT complaining in any way, shape or form! Personally I love it and if it stays that way for the whole summer holidays it's going to be happy days! I can remember that summer we'd just lost like this at the UK. However, whilst some a few problems. One of those issues is that there had plenty of people say to me that they cannot sleep. It you can't sleep because of the heat, or just because your body for some reason has got out of whack then there is something you could try.

For food. Tart cherries. They're among the most food sources of melatonin, the natural sleep-inducing hormone that is produced by the pineal gland in the brain. The body's production of melatonin declines with age, which is part of the reason that older adults often have trouble sleeping. One cup of tart-cherry juice or about two-thirds of a cup of dried tart cherries contains roughly the same amount. Sweet cherries also contain melatonin but not as much. It is believed that the only red pigment in tart cherries, known as anthocyanosides, plays a significant role in aiding sleep. These natural polyphenolic compounds in the cherry juice help to increase the availability of tryptophan, an essential amino acid and a precursor to serotonin that helps sleep. The juice was shown to be able to inhibit an enzyme that degrades tryptophan. Tryptophan degradation is a common problem of insomnia and even though the amount of tryptophan in tart-cherry juice is smaller than is found elsewhere, given to aid sleep, the compounds in tart cherries could prevent the tryptophan from breaking down so it's able to work as the body more effectively. These compounds may help to improve tryptophan bioavailability for serotonin synthesis, which could have a positive effect on sleep. Increasing serotonin also helps improve mood and decrease inflammation. It's this unique combination of melatonin and tryptophan in tart cherries that is likely contributing to the sleep benefits. So, drinking a glass of tart-cherry juice in the morning and the

How to help with insomnia

Really sleep? Use these options: Many common prescription and over-the-counter medications with little efficacy through the side effect is often considered. As you get your medication from, making these drugs will remain in your system for a longer period of time. What the issue is that you may become more prone to certain conditions with medications and may experience a greater awareness of side effects such as memory loss. But all that said, ask your doctor. You decide.

Use Your Vegetables: I know this is boring and we all know it...but I will make a significant difference! Increasing your vegetable intake helps decrease memory loss. Cruciferous vegetables (broccoli, cauliflower, Brussels sprouts) and leafy greens (spinach, kale) are rich in tryptophan. Fruits containing vitamin phytonutrients (such as red grapes, blueberries, apples) and various antioxidants (lemons, oranges, and apricots) are known to actually reverse age-related memory loss. Make sure you are getting enough to make the difference!

evening may be a better and a safer way to treat insomnia than solely used prescription medication. Sleepy perception of the world. A tendency to feel nervous and a glass of cherry juice in the end that perfect sleep.

There is nothing more important than looking after your health as you can plan a thriving and vibrant life.

Stress and anxiety relief

CAN YOU imagine your life without stress? Any level of stress leaves its mark on your mind and body. Even positive events such as a wedding or the birth of a child, bring with them some stress and anxiety.

Acupuncture is a proven and effective treatment for stress relief and is becoming increasingly popular.

Through stimulating channels with needles, the Qi in the body is able to flow freely in order to restore harmonious balance in the body. So you will find release from physical symptoms, such as tense muscles, muscular pain and high blood pressure which will allow you to feel relaxed and energised.

More importantly, regular acupuncture treatment is also helpful in strengthening your body and improve the body's immunity, so you're able to deal with the day to day stresses of life more effectively.

A patient under Dr. Feng Wang's treatment.

Dr. Feng Wang and Susan Wang.

Alternatively, acupuncture/Chinese massage can be applied to people who have a fear of needles. However, acupuncture (needles) is often applied to clients after acupuncture in order to enhance the effectiveness of the treatment.

In fact, in some cases, acupuncture being used to treat one condition can actually help detect another, more serious illness that has not been previously identified. In such cases, acupuncture aids in early diagnosis and treatment.

Remember, acupuncture/acupuncture is just one method of relieving stress. It's also important to learn positive and productive ways to cope with stress on a daily basis, thereby maintaining fitness to help you enjoy a happier and healthier life.

Dr. Feng Wang is an associate of the ACPM and has been practicing his profession for over 30 years. He has been volunteering at CancerCare in Gloucester, which has helped to improve the health of many people. He also has his own clinic in Gloucester city centre.

An adventure on the Baltic Sea - count me in, says Allis Moss

On the sailing ship Arcturion

What freelance journalist who dreamily watches The Tinder and laments the Covid-19 as a kid, wouldn't take the promised hand-off to go on a Baltic adventure of ships, great food and?

The ship I was travelling on would be Arcturion a vessel I have been on before and loved. Arcturion is not a floating city like a modern and luxurious with a library lounge and pub that you can stuff up as well as appropriate mood like the sleeping stoves and the only one in her fleet where you can stand like a figurehead with your arms in the breeze on the bridge or lounge as an even still in "the galaxy lift at the front".

Arcturion has a shallow draft so would be able to use the Hel Canal bound in Germany to go between the North Sea and the Baltic Sea, avoiding having to go around the north of the Jutland Peninsula of Denmark.

The submerged Arcturion sailing ship.

Arriving in Kiel itself I would see a fleet of tall ships from different European ports from Poland to the Netherlands sailing across the harbour. Its name probably derives from the Anglo-Saxon 'tall' for the tower, which tells you how long ships have been coming here.

The next travel destination is Arcturion, part of the ship's and preferences are named in a peninsula they surrounded from an even longer from one side of the waterway to the other.

At the most westerly point in the Gulf of Rendsburg, the Baltic is only around 3 degrees north and 50 miles away from the Arctic Circle. Departing our second port of Travemünde with our anchors and taking on the south of the River Trave in Lübeck Bay for Rostock, I stay out late on the top deck, headlined by the sailing sea, with their bridge - the Grand Bridge building Copenhagen in Sweden.

The Baltic islands

showing as a peninsula of light after the sun set around midnight from the Baltic there is always a bridge on the horizon.

The Baltic Sea is sheltered and relatively tranquil, defined with thousands of islands belonging to Sweden or Finland. Arcturion's captain, Master Mikko, explained some from a Finnish island where they speak Swedish.

In Stockholm, we find out the real situation also has good, if not of you are not used to the situation.

The Arcturion was salvaged from the bay after sinking in 1920 because Finnish King Gustav Vasa's ship was involved in having a double crew of guns on the point of the royal fleet. Vasa took measures on her maiden voyage while still in Stockholm harbour only to be prevented for more than three centuries in the Swedish water - where an old guide tells us - there are no "sea worms" around.

95 per cent of her timbers are original and if you're keen and find the wonderful Mary Rose in Portsmouth you'll love Vasa. The bones of the 15 who died aboard Vasa have been reconstructed by the King's College Park and are on show in an exhibition in the same museum before the museum's purple decorated cathedral.

Speaking of Arcturion it is a 100-masted sailing ship with a long history of Stockholm to Saint Petersburg.

Saint Petersburg has gone through various name changes. For a short while after World War One it was called the World War One before its name was changed from the German to the Russian. Then after the death of Lenin in 1924 it became Leningrad. It's now back to the original and that's where I'm going next.

Driverless cars on UK roads by January

Experts fear Britain will fall behind the US, Japan and Germany if unmanned vehicle tests do not start next year, as planned

THE GOVERNMENT has announced plans to get driverless cars on public roads as early as January 2015.

The vehicles are guided by a system of sensors and cameras, and the trials will last between six and 18 months.

UK cities are now set to host the trials, with up to three sites being selected.

Business secretary Vicky Clark said: "The announcement will see driverless cars take to our streets in less than six months, putting us at the forefront of this transformative technology and opening up new opportunities for our economy and society."

Transport Minister Claire Perry said: "Driverless cars have huge potential to transform the UK's transport network. They could improve safety, reduce congestion and lower emissions, potentially 50%."

But not everyone agrees they are essential, about the same.

AA president Edmund King said: "Many drivers are still resistant to change as 95% enjoy driving too much to want the idea to take over from them."

Meanwhile, the RAC said: "We expect it will be difficult for people to come to terms with giving up control of their vehicle to a computer."

The British Army already uses autonomous vehicles, supplied by automotive design specialist BBA, which is also developing systems for civilian use.

Researchers in Oxford have also developed an autonomous car that can be controlled using an iPad.

Yan Ebner, principal engineer of BBA, told Sky News the UK had some "very advanced technology and some fairly unique know how".

He added: "When we're behind is actually getting the technology into cars and field trials."

Trials in public roads have already been held in Japan, Singapore and Germany, and Sweden will soon follow suit.

In California, driverless cars are already semi-legal. Google's self-driving cars have already logged 700,000 miles.

In May, the web giant unveiled a new model - without a driver.

But the main obstacle may not be technological, but legal.

David Miles, a lawyer at Ashfords, said: "That's going to be one of the areas that consumers want to know about - what does their insurance cover? Is it going to affect premiums?"

"That's going to come down to clarifying exactly where responsibility lies. And that is something the government's going to need to look at and definitely consumer companies are going to want to know about."

Funding helps Chichester City Ladies Football Club - Grow the Game

GRASSROOTS FOOTBALL at Chichester has been given a helping hand following a £5,000 Grow the Game grant, from the Football Foundation, the country's largest sports charity.

The grant will allow Chichester City Ladies Football Club to provide more teams for girls age groups to ensure that more girls have the opportunity of playing competitive football. It is intended to run two further teams for girls at under 10 and 11 in the year and at under 10 level in year two at the current time move up to the higher age groups. The grant will provide for their running costs and the training of people at coaches in accordance with FA qualifications, including first aid training.

The Premier League and The FA fund the Grow the Game scheme with £250,000 each administered by the Football Foundation, the national largest sports charity. The scheme is designed to ensure girls participate in our national game by helping clubs to meet the essential costs of starting new teams.

The key strength of Grow the Game is that its participants connect an achievable rather than instant. The grants create a solid infrastructure of teams and newly-trained coaches in which new people can start playing the sport, rather than simply providing temporary activity sessions, which are then vulnerable to drops in participation once the programme ends.

That was a particular emphasis placed on increasing the number of teams and players from the Under-10 age bracket and above, to address the decline in participation that has traditionally occurred as young people leave school and colleges. The other key focus is on growing the number of girls, women's and disability players.

Max Wright, Manager of the Ladies at 21, and the support of the Football Foundation is very much appreciated to help the club grow and to provide the opportunity for more young girls to take part in football. The club will now be running 15 teams for girls under the age of 11 in the 2014/15 season, as well as two adult teams. The club also runs training sessions for ladies and girls who just want to improve their fitness and play football related activities on Thursday evenings and Saturday mornings to see if they want to move into playing competitive football.

Pavil Thompson, Chief Executive of the Football Foundation, said: "Grow the Game has become one of the Foundation's most popular schemes. This additional funding provided by the Premier League and The FA is excellent news for grassroots clubs willing to start new teams and put their talented coaches qualified with FA coaching badges."

"Congratulations to Chichester City Ladies Football Club for working with the Sussex County FA to access their £5,000 Grow the Game grant which will increase participation in the region as well as support football development in the area."
